Dear Amanda

I see Chair Gensler is going to have a discussion Dave Lauer on Twitter today at 4:00. Apologies for the late note.

The Chair will probably be asked about supposed naked short-selling in MMTLP (a Pfd Issued by MMAT, a Nasdaq-listed company)

It has a vocal crowd you may have seen protesting in front of the SEC, as well as voicing their displeasure with FINRA, Robert Cook, and, sadly myself.

The security traded OTC until FINRA halted trading after the final distribution ex-date (in shares of Next Bridge Hydrocarbons, Inc.).

From my perspective, FINRA acted properly, as the issuer canceled the security, and any short sellers are now liable for an equal amount of shares of Next Bridge Hydrocarbons, Inc.

Amateur investors have been lead to believe there is a synthetic short position. Part of the problem is Daily Short Volume can be misleading.

We wrote a blog post about it.
https://blog.otcmarkets.com/2018/11/13/understanding-short-sale-activity/
FINRA said same thing after we brought it up https://www.finra.org/rules-guidance/notices/information-notice-051019
Recent Update says same thing again
https://www.finra.org/investors/insights/short-interest

The FINRA Short Interest data for MMTLP actually shows short positions consistently moving down over time from 14.4 million shares to 4.6 million shares.

Thanks Amanda

Would be glad to talk to your team.

The way daily short volume data is presented leads to many misunderstandings and needless angst among retail investors.
